THE SMU SCHOOL OF LAW IS CELEBRATING THE CONTINUED SUCCESS OF ITS CAPITAL CAMPAIGN. THE LAW SCHOOL HAS RAISED MORE THAN $20 MILLION OF ITS $30 MILLION GOAL. "EVERY GREAT CITY IN THE UNITED STATES HAS A GREAT LAW SCHOOL," SAYS DEAN JOHN B. ATTANASIO. "BOSTON HAS

HARVARD, NEW YORK HAS YALE, NYU AND COLUMBIA; DETROIT HAS MICHIGAN, AND THE LIST GOES ON. BUILDING ON ITS GREAT TRADITIONS, SMU CAN BE THIS KIND OF LAW SCHOOL FOR THE METROPLEX."

More than 130 people attended a Capital Campaign luncheon in October hosted by Clark J. Matthews, '61, the chief executive officer and president of 7-Eleven Corp. Supporters of the Law School made it clear that they have no intention of resting on their laurels. Robert H. Dedman Sr., '53, founder and chairman of the board of Dallas-based ClubCorp International and a co-chair of the five-year Campaign for SMU, reiterated his often said belief of the

New Professors Join SMU Faculty

The SMU School of Law welcomes two new professors to the faculty. Susan Scafidi and Jeffrey A. Trexler, who join the Law School from Saint Louis University School of Law, bring a unique blend of experience and expertise to SMU.

"We are very excited that such highly regarded teachers and colleagues as Susan Scafidi and Jeff Trexler chose to join our faculty," says Dean John B. Attanasio.

PROFESSOR SCAFIDI

Professor Scafidi's teaching and research specialties include property, intellectual property and Native American law. During the fall semester, she taught courses on "Native Americans in Western Legal Thought" and "Intellectual Property."

"The lynchpin connecting these courses is biblical injunction: "Of those to whom much is given, much is expected."

Alumni, says Dedman, should contribute to the Law School because it is the "right thing to do."

"People should give back to the institution out of gratitude because the education they received enabled them in great part to be the success they have been," says Dedman. "People should also give back to the institution as an investment. Their image as a lawyer is due in great part to the image of SMU as a law school. The better the school appears to be, the better their image is going to be as a lawyer and graduate of SMU."

The Law School's $30 million campaign counts toward SMU's goal to raise $400 million by May 2002.

A Tribute to Logan Ford
Charles O. Galvin Award for Service

The SMU School of Law lost a devoted friend when Logan Ford, '30, died October 24, 1999. He was 93. Ford earned a bachelor's degree from SMU in 1927. Three years later he was in the Law School's third graduating class of about 15.

Before his death, Ford was honored with the Charles O. Galvin Award for Service at the 1999 Distinguished Alumni Awards dinner.

"The two most important things in my life have been my father and mother and Southern Methodist University and its Law School," Ford said in an interview before receiving the Distinguished Alumni Award.

Ford was passionate about life, says wife, Lee Ford. He loved horses, ranching and the fine arts. And he was fiercely loyal to his alma mater.

"SMU was the only school as far as he was concerned," she says. "He felt strongly that the school was responsible for the education he received and his success."

Born in a framed cabin near Fair Park, the Dallas native had a long history with SMU.

As a walk-on, he lettered in football in 1924, '25 and '26, and was an all-conference center on the Southwest Conference champion football team. Ford served as vice president of his graduating class and was a member of Lambda Chi Alpha and the honorary Delta Theta Phi law fraternity.

His commitment to the school continued after graduation. Ford was the first director of the SMU Alumni Association and served two terms as its president. The Fords were also active members of SMU's Dallas Hall Society, which recognizes the generosity of individuals who have made commitments to SMU through planned gifts.

Ford, elected to the American College of Trial Lawyers in 1958, earned $50 a month when he first joined the firm of Wortham, Racine, Burford, Ryburn & Hincks in 1930. He was senior partner of Burford, Ryburn & Ford law firm when he retired in 1978. Later, he practiced Of Counsel with Matthews & Thorp, where he worked with David Brusilow. Long before he met Ford, the legends of his friend's trial practice made for fascinating storytelling, says Brusilow, a friend of 21 years.

"What was most remarkable about Logan was that he was the friendliest, nicest man you would ever want to know (outside the courtroom that is)," says Brusilow. "He loved the law and his wife told me that it was very common for Logan to try cases in his sleep (literally), even until the day he passed away."

After Ford retired he continued to handle pro bono cases for those who could not afford counsel, says Brusilow.

"He would handle those cases and spend the same amount of time in their preparation and research as he did when he was being compensated for his time," Brusilow says. "That made an everlasting impression on me. He was truly a remarkable man and I was glad that he was my dear friend."

Shortly before his death, Lee and Logan Ford established a charitable remainder trust of $2.5 million to create an endowed scholarship fund for students at the SMU School of Law.

Memorials may be made to the Logan Ford Endowed Scholarship Fund at SMU, P.O. Box 750116, Dallas, TX 75275.

"SMU was the only school as far as he was concerned. He felt strongly that the school was responsible for the education he received and his success," says Lee Ford, of her husband Logan Ford

SMU Hosts Top Legal Financial Experts at SMU Law School Asian Conference

The SMU School of Law continues to forward its mission as a "global law school" as host of an historic series of conferences in 1999 that explored worldwide financial issues.

The global conference began on the SMU campus in March and traveled throughout 1999 to Cologne, London, Hong Kong, Johannesburg and Bangkok.

The March conference, entitled "Law-Based Nature of the New International Financial Infrastructure," brought together business leaders, academics, bankers, government officials and members of international organizations to discuss international financial sector reform.

"The Dallas conference and other speakers throughout the year represented a multi-disciplinary approach to a global problem," says Dean John B. Attanasio. "Those who converged on the Law School came from such fields as economics, law, finance and government. They came from around the country and the world. The Dallas conference catalyzed a worldwide series of related conferences. The great expertise and contacts of SMU faculty like Joe Norton and alumni like Alan Feld and Justice Hideo Chikusa made SMU Law School uniquely positioned to organize this discussion. We partnered with many institutions on campus, notably the Economics Department and Tower Center, and we also cooperated with a number of law schools around the world."

The one-of-a-kind seminar demonstrates a powerful use of the Law School's network of international contacts and expertise, adds Professor Norton.

"This is the first conference of this type cosponsored by a law school within a concentrated period of time," says Professor Norton. "This is truly a global conference or series of conferences that will produce a major book and international publications."

Speakers at the Dallas kickoff conference included Dr. Helmut Sohmen, '67, chairman, Pacific Basin Economic Council and Dean Attanasio and Professor Norton organized the conference. Other SMU School of Law professors who took part in the proceedings included Christopher Hanna, professor of law, and co-director of the Center for Pacific Rim Legal Studies; Ndiva Kofele-Kale, professor of law; Roberto MacLean, president, Law Institute of the Americas, and visiting professor; Marc Steinberg, senior associate dean for academics and Rupert and Lillian Radford Professor of Law; Peter Winship, James Cleo Thompson Sr. Trustee professor of law; and Jane Winn, professor of law and co-director of the Center for Pacific Rim Legal Studies.

Other speakers at the conference included Miguel Angel Garza, director general for international affairs of the Mexican National Banking and Securities Commission; attorney Anna Gelpert, with the General Counsel's Office of the Department of the Treasury; Dr. Chang Mook Sohn, executive director of the Office of the Economic and Revenue Forecast Council-Washington State; Dr. Manuela Tortora, senior advisor for the Latin American Economic System; and former Texas Instruments executive Dr. Norman Neureiter, honorary counsel general of Japan.

The Law School capped off the series with a visit from U.S. Senator Phil Gramm (R-Texas), who discussed the affect of new banking legislation on financial institutions in the coming millennium. (See Phil Gramm story, pg 5)

Conference proceedings will be published nationally and abroad. The Dorothy Lee Trust sponsored the series of conferences. The Lee Trust and H.D. Vest Financial Services supported the Dallas conference.

U.S. Senator Phil Gramm Discusses Banking at SMU

U.S. Senator Phil Gramm, (R-Texas), chairman of the U.S. Senate Banking Committee, paid a visit to the SMU School of Law to share his insight on federal banking legislation.

In a Sept. 24 lecture in the Walsh Classroom, Sen. Gramm spoke on the Financial Services Modernization Act of 1999. The measure under consideration repeals the Glass-Steagall Act, which "erected walls between banking and insurance and banking and financing," says Sen. Gramm. He calls the act the most important banking bill in the past 60 years.

"These industries are competing against each other, but in very convoluted, inefficient ways," he says.

The bill is designed to allow certain banks to conduct financial activities through operating subsidiaries, protect consumer privacy, and modernize operations of the Federal Home Loan Bank system. With the growing importance of the electronic age, protecting privacy, whether through provisions on the bill or part of a free-standing measure, will be addressed.

"My position on privacy is very simple," says Gramm. "If a bank tells me their policy, they fulfill my privacy requirements because I do not have to bank with them...banks will acquire customers by saying 'we won't share your list.'"

The lecture also included comments from Professor Joe Norton, the James L. Walsh Distinguished Faculty Fellow in Financial Institutions; Shlomo Weber, the Robert H. and Nancy Dedman Trustee Professor of Economics and chairman of the Department of Economics at SMU; and Herb D. Vest, chairman and chief executive officer of Irving, Texas-based H.D. Vest Financial Services.

Sen. Gramm's speech wrapped up a series of conferences hosted by SMU that explored international financial issues around the globe including Cologne, London, Hong Kong, Johannesburg and Bangkok.

U.S. Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison Speaks at SMU

U.S. Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison (R-Texas) shared her views on the legal and appropriate framework for the use of force by America's military during a recent visit to the SMU School of Law.

Sen. Hutchison, who serves on the Senate's Defense Appropriations Committee, spoke to students and others during a lecture in the Walsh Classroom on Nov. 16. She told the audience that U.S. military forces are stretched to the breaking point with peacekeeping missions in such places as Kosovo and Bosnia. As a result, when it comes to military involvement in other countries, the U.S. must consider that there is "something between doing nothing and taking the full responsibility in American hands," she says. "As a superpower, the United States must draw distinctions between the essential and the important." Otherwise, she says, America's resources will be dissipated and unable to handle either.

"If there is no American security interest threatened by a military action, then we have to consider carefully whether we should be sending young Americans in to possibly die to defend someone else's national security interest," she says. "How about, instead, encouraging our regional allies to deal with regional problems with our assistance in the backup? This will let us focus our resources where only the United States has unique capabilities."

She cites airpower and technology as the areas of expertise that the U.S. should focus its military efforts on. Sen. Hutchison predicts the issue will be continually important for elected officials.

"I think the ethical questions are: a foreign policy that remains strong, that stays true to our core principles and is the beacon of freedom to the world."

Hutchison, whose husband Ray Hutchison, '59, is a graduate of the SMU School of Law, is the first woman to represent Texas in the U.S. Senate. She also serves on the Senate Commerce Committee and chairs the subcommittee on Surface Transportation and Merchant Marine. Formerly, she served two terms in the Texas House of Representatives and was Texas State Treasurer.

U.S. Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison spoke to students and others during a lecture in the Walsh Classroom on Nov. 16. The Texas Republican, who serves on the Senate Appropriations, Defense and Military Construction subcommittees, shared her opinions on America's engagement in the world as we enter a new century.

Yeager Tapped for Alumni Development

Doug Yeager has been named director of alumni development for the SMU School of Law.

Yeager is a graduate of Princeton University with a Bachelor of Arts degree in history. He received his JD degree in 1972 from the University of Texas School of Law, where he was associate editor of the Texas Law Review. Prior to joining SMU, Yeager specialized in business law in private practice.

"Doug is a person of exceptional talent, credentials and enthusiasm," says Dean John B. Attanasio. "His vast experience with the Princeton alumni system will help us continue to strengthen our own alumni organization."

Yeager brings to the SMU School of Law extensive experience in alumni relations and development at both the national and regional levels. He served on the executive committee of the Princeton University Alumni Council, which heads the university's alumni relations program. As chairman of the Council's committee on regional associations, which focuses on more than 100 regional alumni clubs and associations, he developed and published a new handbook for regional association officers. He also planned and led leadership training workshops for regional volunteers at Princeton and in three other major cities.

His leadership positions within the regional Princeton Alumni Association of Dallas include president, secretary-treasurer, and chairman of the annual giving committee. He has also chaired the school's careers and public relations committees. Yeager has also worked closely with Princeton's Development office in all facets of donor relations.

"I have grown to love alumni and development work on behalf of private higher education through my 25 years of volunteer service to Princeton University," says Yeager. "This position offers me a great opportunity to utilize my volunteer service experience, along with my professional experience in law, to make a significant contribution to one of the leading law schools in the country."

Yeager has received the national Alumni Council Award for Service to Princeton University and the Princeton Association of Dallas-Fort Worth Service Award.

"My goals are to improve and expand the services that the School of Law provides to its alumni, as well as to strengthen and enlarge the participation of alumni in supporting the school through personal service, as well as by monetary contributions," says Yeager.

$1.2 Million Gift From Hatton Sumners Foundation Supports Scholarship Program

The Hatton W. Sumners Foundation of Dallas has given $1.2 million to support the foundation's endowed scholarship program at Southern Methodist University School of Law.

The scholarship program, created by the foundation in 1969, selects five Hatton W. Sumners Scholars each year to receive full scholarships upon entering the Law School. More than 130 Sumners Scholars have graduated from the SMU School of Law since the scholars' first graduating class in 1972.

"Gifts for scholarships are among the top priorities of the Campaign for SMU," said President R. Gerald Turner. "The Hatton Sumners Scholarship Program has enabled SMU to educate many leaders of the legal profession in the Dallas area and beyond. Their service to the profession and to the communities in which they practice is a fitting tribute to Hatton Sumners and the foundation he established. This program will continue to benefit future leaders of the legal profession for years to come."

The scholars receive full tuition and a stipend for room, board and books. The current aggregate value of the program for each Hatton Sumners Scholar is about $85,000 over the three-year period.

SMU Law Dean John B. Attanasio said: "Through the Hatton Sumners scholarships, we have one of the premier scholarship programs to be found in the nation's law schools.

These prestigious scholarships enable us to attract some of the most outstanding law students available. We are grateful to the Hatton W. Sumners Foundation for its generous support through the years and for this latest gift to the scholarship program.

With the $1.2 million, the foundation has given more than $4.3 million to SMU over the last 40 years. The majority of those gifts have gone to the School of Law, but also include scholarships in SMU's Dedman College of Humanities and Sciences.

The Hatton W. Sumners Foundation was established in 1949 "to encourage study, teaching and research into the science and art of self-government."

A Tennessee native, Hatton W. Sumners, moved to Texas with his family in the early 1890s. He "read law" on his own and was admitted to the bar in 1897. He was elected to Congress from Dallas County in 1912 and served continuously until his retirement in 1947. He then joined the Southwestern Legal Center, formed at SMU in 1947, and served as director of research in law and government.

In his later years, he lived on the SMU campus in what was then Lawyers Inn, a residence hall for law students, which was renovated and renamed Carr Collins Jr. Hall in 1994.

Sumners continued to counsel SMU law students and young lawyers until his death in 1962 at the age of 87.

New Professors

copyright, patent, trademark, or trade secret law—is a field of explosive growth, driven by the new information economy, she says.

"Not only law graduates serving high tech clients, but practitioners in all fields, must be able to draw upon the basic principles of intellectual property law," she says.

A Phi Beta Kappa, Professor Scafidi earned a Bachelor of Arts degree at Duke University in 1990 and her JD at Yale Law School. She continues work on a Ph.D at the University of Chicago with a planned dissertation that explores the application of Western law to Native Americans during the Spanish Colonial period.

"Susan adds to our great strength in the growing area of intellectual property, setting us on a path to become one of the leading schools in the United States in this area," says Dean Attanasio. "She also adds to our dominant positions in the international law and legal history areas."

PROFESSOR TREXLER

Professor Trexler received his Bachelor of Arts in 1986 from the University of North Carolina, where he was a Phi Beta Kappa.

"Jeff adds to our dominant positions in business and international law and to our great strength in health law helping us to become one of the dominant schools in those areas," says Dean Attanasio. "He specializes in the burgeoning area of not-for-profits, which has been neglected by law schools."

Professor Trexler, assistant professor of law, aims to teach students that the law is not a "closed system," or a "secret handshake."

"My classes try to make connections students might not otherwise imagine: How do rival statutes reflect different assumptions regarding the nature of language? What's the connection between religion, computer networks and current trends in business enterprise—and how can theories of profit-maximizing corporations help us resolve the school prayer controversy?," says Professor Trexler. "My aim is to show students how the nuts-and-bolts of corporate law grows, and in knowing this, how they can rise above being mere technicians to become leaders in the legal community."

While Professor Trexler taught Business Enterprise during the fall semester, he also specializes in business associations, corporate finance, contracts, financial systems in emerging democracies, health law, tax, law and literature, and law and religion. In addition, he has published books and papers on both Russian law and tax-exempt organizations—two subjects that easily go together, says Professor Trexler, who before receiving a JD at Yale Law School, earned a Ph.D. at Duke University in American Religious History.

"I'm interested in how an organization—from a corner store to a country to an international association—can harbor conflicting values while maintaining a coherent identity," says Professor Trexler. "You can learn a lot about a country—ours, Russia—from listening to how people talk about and cultivate organizational cultures. And the intersection of cultures in international legal reform is an especially revealing forum."

Luce has been involved in the creation of major Texas real estate projects including Alliance Airport in Fort Worth and the 2,500-acre Legacy development in Plano, Texas—home of J.C. Penney and Electronic Data Services.

Luce is also notable for his role as the principal architect of significant changes in Texas education in the mid-1980s, including the no-pass, no-play rule, while he served as chief of staff of the Texas Select Committee for Public Education.

Several Texas governors have tapped Luce five times for major state positions, including his most recent appointment by Gov. George Bush as a member of the Education Commission of the States.

Student Spotlight: Temesha Evans-Davis

By Rebecca Greenan

When Temesha Evans-Davis talks about her current success, she can't help but point to her family's past.

Evans-Davis, the 1997 Sarah T. Hughes Fellow, is a native of Shreveport, La. She grew from a precocious kindergartner and admitted "teacher's pet" into an eager elementary student with an ever-ready raised hand. She continued to blossom as a well-spoken performing arts high school student active in plays and musicals.

Her leadership abilities surfaced early. She was class president in the fourth grade, vice-president of her middle school student council and class president during her freshman, sophomore and senior years of high school.

As a youngster, Evans-Davis' progress made her a natural to participate in her elementary school's gifted and talented program. School officials refused until the youngster's mother insisted that the test be administered, even if the results excluded her daughter from the program. Evans-Davis tested into the gifted and talented program and has proven ever since that she is both.

But for the tenacity of her family, living in the segregated south, Evans-Davis' story could have been quite different. Her maternal grandfather always wanted to be an engineer. School, however, was beyond his realm of possibility. A father of eight children, he worked at a munitions plant in Louisiana during the days when whites and blacks drank from separate water fountains.

Yet, he "never let them take his manhood," drinking from the "whites only" water fountain until he retired, she says. Evans-Davis' grandmother also refused to let any of her children eat at segregated counters or use separate facilities. When her grandfather tested for a promotion to become a supervisor, the man administering the test never bothered to look at the results, crumpling up the paper in front of her grandfather's face. He persevered, tested again and became a supervisor.

Evans-Davis' mother ultimately became the engineer in the family. She graduated at the top of her class from Grambling State University, and was hired by BellSouth, where she became a supervisor over a team of engineers. Some 19 years later, Evans-Davis followed in her mother's footsteps also graduating at the top of her class at Grambling.

The SMU School of Law scholar originally planned to attend medical school after

Evans-Davis settled the issue in her mind of whether or not she should be in law school when she received the highest grade in her constitutional law class. She credits L.A. Bedford, a Dallas attorney considered the "god father" for mentoring up and coming African-American lawyers, for speaking on her behalf for the Sarah T. Hughes Fellowship, sponsored by the Dallas Bar Foundation. Others have obtaining a degree in chemistry. Her plans changed after meeting an African-American patent attorney during a summer internship as a chemist with Upjohn Pharmaceutical Corp. in Kalamazoo, Michigan.

Inspired by this attorney and his wife, an African-American judge, Evans-Davis set her sights on law school. Financial necessity delayed her entrance to law school; she worked as a quality control chemist in Shreveport for three years before coming to SMU.

Law school has posed challenges and produced many rewards for Evans-Davis, 27. She sat uncomfortably through discussions about slavery during her first year constitutional law course.

She wanted to add a voice of diversity but didn't speak much because the experience was "emotional, harrowing, and exhausting." The debate over affirmative action made her wonder if fellow students believed she belonged in law school.

At the end of her first year of law school, Evans-Davis was invited to join the SMU Law Review. Additionally, she is a barrister, president of the Black Law Students' Association (BLSA), and has served two years as the student director of the Academic Support Program. Following graduation in May, Evans-Davis will clerk for the Honorable Judge Carl E. Stewart, 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in Shreveport, La.

"I am ecstatic and humbled to have been selected for a clerkship with the Honorable Judge Carl E. Stewart," says Evans-Davis. "I anticipate my clerkship will give me a greater understanding of the judicial process."

Evans-Davis plans to return to Dallas. Following her clerkship, she will be an associate with Worsham, Forsythe, & Wooldridge, L.L.P. Evans-Davis and her husband, Antonio, have a seven-year-old son, Brandon.

Segovia Receives A.J. Thomas Award

Rosario Elena "Chachy" Segovia was named the A.J. Thomas Outstanding Third Year Law Student for the Southern Methodist University School of Law Class of 1999. Segovia was tapped for the honor by a panel of her peers who cited her outstanding achievement, service and dedication to the Law School and student body.

"Ms. Segovia has been an invaluable contributor to the Law School's evolving reputation as a world-renowned global law center," says Shawn Cleveland, spokesman for the Barristers, a law school student organization. "She is a wonderful example of selfless dedication to the Law School and to her peers."

Segovia received her undergraduate degree from the University of Texas in Austin before attending the SMU School of Law. She served as the Senior Student Fellow of the Law Institute of the Americas under the guidance of SMU Law Professors Joseph J. Norton and Roberto MacLean and president of the International Law Society. She also spent much time mentoring fellow law students with the Academic Support Program and Dallas elementary students in a Spanish-based tutoring program. After graduation in May, she joined the firm of Baker and McKenzie, in the international practice group of the law firm's Dallas office.

The annual award is given in honor of A.J. Thomas, an SMU law professor from 1947 to 1982, who was the first William Hawley Atwell Professor of Constitutional Law. He served twice as acting dean of the Law School. The award is given annually to the Law School student chosen by the barristers.
